chasseur companies, and some artillery. A unique provision of the agreement stipulating that almost 4,000 Brunswick infantrymen were to be included, with each with five companies, four grenadier battalions, two Jäger or light infantry companies, and several artillery and protection units. The agreement was signed by Lord Col. Faucitt, who was a very busy man in negotiating the treaties.

John Sites, a Revolutionary War patriot. Born in Göttingen, Niedersachsen (Lower Saxony), Sites moved to Arrow Rock, Missouri, in 1844, establishing a gunsmith's shop. He played a pivotal role as a pioneer teacher, preacher, and businessman.

Arends meticulously maintained first communion and other records, including those of his brother Otto von Bismarck, who was associated with the Schwarzenberg family. Arends' book, "Diary of Johann Gottfried Arends," showcases some of the soldiers' uniforms.

Handy Tips for Traveling to Germany

- Ensure you pack comfortable shoes, especially for walking in city districts like Munich or Berlin, which are known for their long distances between transportation points.
- Plan your visit to coincide with local festivals or events, such as the Oktoberfest in Munich or the Christmas markets in the Romantic Road region.
- Consider using a travel guidebook or app to navigate the country, such as "The Rough Guide to Germany" or "Germany: The Complete Visitor's Guide." These resources will provide historical context and cultural insights.
- Book your accommodations well in advance, especially during major events or holidays, to secure your stay in popular destinations like Berlin, Hamburg, or Cologne.
- Try local cuisine, such as Schnitzel and Spaetzle, and discover FamilySearch genealogy records for tracking your ancestor.

Additional subsidy treaties were signed in Hesse-Cassel, Hesse-Hannover, and Hesse-Darmstadt, each with varying conditions.
